Parental Power Summit to Empower Parents with Tools for Educational Advocacy

Baltimore, MD — The Parental Power Summit is set to take place on October 23rd at Huber Memorial in Baltimore, MD. This event is dedicated to engaging and empowering parents on crucial topics related to their children's education and school environment.

As educational policies and classroom dynamics continue to evolve, the Parental Power Summit serves as an essential platform for parents, educators, and policymakers to come together to discuss, learn, and advocate for a schooling experience that aligns with family values and parental expectations.

Keynote Speakers and Topics

The summit will feature a lineup of distinguished speakers, including Community Leader/Advocate + Master of Ceremonies Darren Badillo, Father Edward Meeks of Christ the King Church, Kit Hart from Moms for Liberty, Jeff Trimbath and Jonathan Alexandre, Esq. from the Maryland Family Institute, Ismail Royer director at Religious Freedom Institute (RFI), Deborah Brocato chair from Health Not Harm MD and others who will cover a range of topics from health and mental health in schools to curriculum transparency and parental rights in education. These sessions are designed to equip parents with the knowledge and tools needed to effectively advocate for their children's educational needs.

Panel Discussion

Attendees will have the opportunity to participate in a panel discussions that provides practical advice and strategies for navigating the educational system. Topics include how to communicate with school boards, understanding educational legislation, and collaborating with like-minded parents to effect change.
